TO MY FATHER,

Preface.

The Series of Cuneiform Texts which are transliterated and translated in this, the second volume of my work on the Devils and Evil Spirits of Babylonia, are of a magical character, except for the interesting descriptions which are given of supernatural beings which form the concluding portion of the book. In contents, construction, and phraseology they closely resemble the documents relating to Evil Spirits, which will be found in the preceding volume.

A careful examination of the documents makes it almost certain that they were originally written in the ancient non-Semitic or Sumerian language of Mesopotamia, and we shall probably be not far wrong if we assign to them an antiquity of not less than six thousand years. It will, of course, be understood that the versions which are rendered into English in the following pages do not belong to this early date, but it is more than probable that they represent substantially an extremely ancient recension. Since they were drawn up for the Royal Library at Nineveh by the command of Ashurbanipal about the first half of the seventh century before Christ, we are fully justified in assuming that due care was shown by the court scribes in the choice of their materials.
The various groups of texts translated herein may be briefly described as follows:—

(1) The Ašakki maršûti, i.e., a Series of tablets which were composed with the view of curing the "Fever-sickness." The number of tablets in the Series was not less than twelve, and the material consisted of exorcisms and spells, which were directed against the disease Ašakku. I have here translated this word by "fever," because the symptoms exhibited by a man suffering from the Ašakku-disease closely resemble those of one smitten by intermittent fever, or by malaria. It must, however, be remembered that the translation of Ašakku by "fever" is tentative.

(2) The Ṭri, i.e., a Series of tablets which were composed with the view of curing headache; the number of tablets in the Series consisted of nine, and their contents are charms and incantations which were used to drive away pains of all kinds in the head. In the present state of our knowledge it is impossible to say whether the early Sumerians distinguished between the various forms of headache which are accompanied by nausea, vomiting, etc.

(3) A series of miscellaneous texts containing charms, spells, and incantations, similar in character to that of the texts described in paragraphs (1) and (2). It is perfectly clear that they were written for the purpose of driving diseases of various kinds out of the body, but it is unfortunately impossible in all cases in the present state of our knowledge to say what those infirmities were. We are, however, certain from the contents of the Tablet which I have called "U," that this document was composed with the express purpose of affording relief to those unfortunate wights who had been so unlucky as to have come under the influence of the Evil Eye.

(4) The next group of tablets is called LUH-KA, a title for which the meaning "Cleansing of the Mouth" may be suggested tentatively. Whether this be its exact rendering or not matters comparatively little, but we are certain that the texts were written for the purpose of restoring to ceremonial purity a man who had wittingly or unwittingly become contaminated or impure through touching or even beholding some unclean thing. The compositions of this group were, in short, intended to destroy one of the many forms of tapu to which, according to ancient Sumerian tradition, mankind was peculiarly liable.

(5) A group of tablets which contain descriptions of a number of supernatural beings, which corresponded roughly to the modern Arabic Jinn and Jann. The identification of the greater number of these is difficult;
among those worthy of special note is the goddess
NIN-TU, who is said to wear an elaborate tiara and veil, and to be girt about the loins with a zone or garment, her breast being uncovered. The upper part of her body is that of a naked woman, and the lower part is said to be scaly like the skin of a snake. It is important from many points of view to observe that she is represented suckling her babe at the left breast. In the course of the excavations which have been made in Assyria during the last fifty years, numbers of clay figures possessing the characteristics described above have been found, and we are probably right in considering that they are intended to be votive figures of the goddess Nin-tu, which have been offered to her by devout but barren women who desired offspring. (For specimens of these figures see the Babylonian and Assyrian Room in the British Museum, Nos. 91,853-91,854.) There is little doubt that Nin-tu occupied among the peoples of Mesopotamia the position which Hathor held among the Egyptians and the Virgin Mary among Oriental Christian peoples. She was, in fact, a form of the World-Mother, or Chief Mother-Goddess, who plays such an important part in many mythologies.

(6) A text which supplies us with a unique version of the Legend of the Worm, i.e., with a copy of a very ancient prescription for curing the toothache. One of the most interesting characteristics of the legend is the manner in which the genesis of the Worm is traced by a series of steps from Anu, the Sky-god, and we see how even an evil thing may be derived from a divine source. Similarly, we may note the fact that the magician would sometimes assert that the evil which he was about to combat was so powerful that it had at some remote period vanquished even the gods themselves. Thus, in Col. III of K. 191 we are told that the \textit{ṣam libbi}, i.e., "Heart-plant," on one occasion overcame the heart of Shamash, the Sun-god, and of Sin, the Moon-god, and that it also had power over the hearts of men and animals; and it is perfectly clear that the "Heart-plant" must have possessed some intoxicating and narcotic effect. We may note in passing that this text states that the plant grew in Matan, which is usually identified with the Sinaitic Peninsula, and I venture to suggest the identification of the \textit{ṣam libbi} with the \textit{Hyoscyamus muticus}, which I have seen growing in the Peninsula, and the natives told me that this plant possessed highly intoxicating properties, in fact they call it \textit{saykarān}, i.e., that which intoxicates.\footnote{For the text and a German rendering see Dr. Kuchler's \textit{Beiträge}, Leipzig, 1904, p. 9 ff.}

One of the most important results obtained from the study of the above-mentioned texts is the discovery of the existence of the \textit{tapu} among the Sumerians and their successors, the Babylonians and Assyrians. It seems that it was almost impossible for man to avoid falling under some \textit{tapu} or ban, and it is clear that the Semitic inhabitants of Western Asia must have derived their knowledge of this remarkable superstition from the earlier non-Semitic inhabitants of the country. With the existence of the \textit{tapu} among the Sumerians I have been acquainted for some time past, but to M. Fossey belongs the credit of being the first to publish an account of it, and to give the texts on which his deductions were based. For his views on the subject the reader is referred to his careful work La Magie Assyrienne, which appeared in 1902. Finally, mention must be made of another important discovery of the existence among the Sumerians of ceremonies which prove that this people had developed the idea of the "Atonement" several hundreds of years before the Hebrews. The verb used is kuppuru, which, as Dr. Zimmern has pointed out, is identical with the Hebrew word קְפַּרְוּ.

The ideas and beliefs which actually underlie the Levitical ceremonies of the "Atonement" are still but imperfectly understood, but I believe that the study of the texts in which the "Atonement" of the Sumerians is mentioned and described will do much to indicate the method to be followed in dealing with this important subject.

In conclusion, my thanks are due to Dr. E. A. Wallis Budge and Mr. L. W. King for much help in writing this book.

LEGEND OF THE WORM.

No. 55,547 (Part XVII, Plate 50).
Introduction.
Introduction.

In the first volume of this work the texts treated of belonged chiefly to the Series entitled "The Evil Spirits," and dealt with the relations which existed between men and demons, and provided the spells whereby the evil which had attacked a sick man might be removed. The incantations of the two Series "Fever Sickness" and "Headaches" which are translated in the present volume are of a similar character, but the formulæ prescribed must be classed under the head of sympathetic magic to an even greater extent than those of the preceding Series, and the exorcisms go far to show that the tapu (more commonly known as taboo) was as real a terror to the Assyrians as it was to the other Semitic tribes. The more this class of texts is examined, the more closely are their contents found to resemble the magic of other nations. This is proved by the following considerations:—

(1) Words of Power.

In attacking the powers of evil it was of no avail for the magician to rely solely on his own strength; it was necessary for him to call to his aid some divine authority to support him in his combat. This aid is generally known as the "Word of Power," and in its simplest form is the name of some divine being or thing. It is for this reason that so many of the Assyrian incantations end with the words at which adjuration the evil spirits are supposed to be overcome. It is also common to find long lists of gods invoked in the same way and for the same purpose.

"By Heaven be ye exorcised! By Earth be ye exorcised!"

But in addition to this simple form there are many elaborations which can all be traced back to the same fountain-head. For instance, in many exorcisms against diseases which were supposed to be caused by the agency of spirits, we find the sorcerer repeating the legend which tells how Marduk went to Ea, his father, to ask his advice against the sickness which possesses the sick man for whom he is reciting the incantation:—

"Marduk hath seen him (the sick man) and
"Unto the house of his father Ea hath entered and spoken:
"'Father'
"Twice he hath said unto him,
"'What this man shall do he knoweth not,
"'Whereby he may be assuaged.'

1 Here Marduk repeats the first line of the tablet.
"Ea hath answered his son Marduk:
"'O my son, what dost thou not know,
"'What more can I give thee?
"'O Marduk, what dost thou not know,
"'How can I add unto thy knowledge?
"'What I know thou knowest also.
"'Go, my son Marduk'"1

Then follow the advice of Ea and his instructions for healing the patient. This legend is constantly repeated in the incantations, and it was so well known that it is generally quoted on the tablets in an abbreviated form in one line in the following way: "Marduk hath seen him: 'What I'; 'Go, my son'"; the priest or magician supplying the remainder and reciting it in full.

Now, it is not difficult to see that the mention of this episode is based on a fundamental principle of all magic, viz., the use of Words of Power, for rites and ceremonies have no inherent authority of their own, and are only of avail when used in conjunction with supernatural aid. By bringing in the story of Ea and Marduk, the magician at once invokes divine help, and, in so far as he carries out the directions which Ea gives to his son, it is as though Marduk were himself performing the incantation, the exorcist becoming the servant of the god, endowed with corresponding power against spirits. Indeed, magic, be it worked by spell or amulet, depends largely on these Words of Power written or recited, and a similar use of magical words is to be found among other ancient nations. For instance, we find in the Egyptian Pyramid Texts of Unas (c. 3500 B.C.) that it is stated that "a book with words of magical power" was buried with him.\(^1\) No demon could withstand the authority of these mystic words if only they were rightly employed, particularly if used in the proper place, and with the proper intonation, and by a properly qualified priest.

1 See note d, p. 117 of Vol. I.

We have seen, then, that Ea and Marduk, two of the most powerful gods of Assyria, especially in all matters relating to sorcery, were supposed to help magicians, should they be invoked to aid them in their spells. The use of mighty names in exorcisms, and the invocations to the gods to lay the evil under a ban, had each its special significance. The human sorcerer with all his ceremonies and abracadabra was powerless against supernatural evil unless he could depend on the aid of some more powerful spirit, and since the gods were vested with authority over all evil, it was the gods to whom he turned in his hour of need. The system is a universal one, and lies at the base of all magic, whether it be the spells of the Sumerian priest who exorcised a demon two or three thousand years before Christ, or a Syrian monk casting out devils, or a mediæval wizard summoning a familiar spirit. The only difference lies in the actual divine word which was used; the Babylonian priest adjures the evil spirit by one of the gods, or by heaven and earth, while the later wizards invoke the name of Christ. Each trusts to the god in whom he believes to lay the devil under a ban.

It is also plain from these texts that the Assyrian sorcerer considers himself in direct communication with the gods, being merely the mouthpiece through which the divine will acts. Indeed, he claims to be sent by the gods when he is expelling a demon:—

"The man of Ea am I!
"The man of Damkina am I!
"The messenger of Marduk am I!
"To revive the ( ) sick man,
"The great lord Ea hath sent me;
"He hath added his pure spell to mine,
"He hath added his pure voice to mine,
"He hath added his pure spittle to mine,
"He hath added his pure prayer to mine." ¹

And at the end of his exorcism he prays to Ea ²:—

"O Ea, King of the Deep, to see . . .
"I, the magician, am thy slave.

² Ibid., l. 260.
"March thou on my right hand,
"Be present on my left;
"Add thy pure spell unto mine,
"Add thy pure voice unto mine,
"Vouchsafe (to me) pure words,
"Make fortunate the utterances of my mouth,
"Ordain that my decisions be happy,
"Let me be blessed where'er I tread,
"Let the man whom I (now) touch be blessed.
"Before me may lucky thoughts be spoken,
"After me may a lucky finger be pointed.
"Oh that thou wert my guardian Genius,
"And my guardian Spirit!"

Now the idea that the sorcerer was the direct agent of the divine will continued down to the Middle Ages, when the wizard in uttering his spells describes himself as "the servant of the Most High." ¹

The intention of the magician when combating these evil spirits is to bind them in such a way, with the help of the Mighty Names, that they can do no more harm. In all Assyrian magical texts great stress is laid on the banning or tabooing of the demons by the divine powers which the priest invokes, i.e., either the names of gods or, far more frequently, the powers of heaven and earth. The phrase "By Heaven be ye exorcised! By Earth be ye exorcised!" calls in all celestial and earthly powers against the invisible foes, who will thus be spellbound. In the same way, some thousands of years later in the same country the descendants of these people, the holy Nestorian monks, were credited with the ability to exorcise devils and lay them under a ban in the name of Christ. It is related of Rabban Hormizd, the Persian, that he once overcame certain devils in this way:

"Straightway the devils of the impure Ignatius [began] to buzz in the air,

"And they took the miserable man up and held him suspended in the air;

"Suddenly our father fixed a sharp arrow in his bow,

"And shot it at the miserable man and his legions and pierced his heart;

"He made the deceiving devils to hear [these words]:—'It is not meet for you

"'To fulfil in him your will with the fulness of impurity:

"'By Jesus Christ I bind you, O ye trembling horde,

"'So that ye may abide in the air as ye are in hot agitation,

"'And ye shall continue to abide in terror until I loose you from the bond.'"\(^1\)

\(^1\) E. A. Wallis Budge, The Histories of Rabban Hormizd, p. 474.
(2) Knowledge of the Supernatural Enemy.

Words of power, therefore, plainly constitute one of the first principles of magic. The next principle, and one no less important, consists in the knowledge of the name or characteristics of the unseen influence which afflicts the sick man. It is, however, not necessary that the diagnosis should be exact, for it cannot be expected that a magician should be able to define the exact form of the invisible demon or tapu which has assailed his patient. Devils are legion, and tapus may arise from countless unknown or forgotten causes, and neither can be distinctly specified; yet it is absolutely necessary that the spirit or evil influence shall be mentioned by name in order that, by whatsoever power it be that it is removed, there shall be no doubt as to what is meant. To this end, therefore, the priest repeats long lists of ghosts, devils, or tapus, any one of which may be the cause of the sickness, and by so doing he impresses the demon that he is in possession of his name or description. The idea underlying this custom is that when once he possesses the name of his enemy he has gained the mastery over some portion of him, and just as he is able to cast spells upon living people if he has some of their nail-parings, or hair, or even wax figures in their likeness, so is he able to conjure the hostile spirit because he knows its name. This is exemplified in the customs of the natives of many savage tribes, who are afraid to disclose their names lest some enemy should hear it and thereby be able to work magic against them.\textsuperscript{1} Thus, "an Australian black is always very unwilling to tell his real name, and there is no doubt that this reluctance is due to the fear that through his name he may be injured by sorcerers."\textsuperscript{2} Among the ancient Egyptians the monster Apep could be destroyed by making a wax figure of him, and after writing his name upon it by casting it into the fire;\textsuperscript{3} and it is evident that the writing of the name is considered as good as moulding nail-parings into the wax, the difference being that Apep is a demon and nothing tangible can be obtained of him. In Palestinian Demonology the same thing is apparent in the words of the Unclean Spirit (Luke iv, 34), "Art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art; the Holy One of God."

In the magic of the Middle Ages, if a demon was slow to appear at the command of the wizard, he rendered himself liable to be cursed and buried in oblivion, because his master knew his name and "seal." In one of the Grimoires, or books on magic, the student of sorcery is recommended to write the seal of the demon on a piece of parchment and put it into a box "with brimstone, assafœtida, and other stinking \textsuperscript{1} On this see Frazer, \textit{Golden Bough} (2nd ed.), i, 404.

\textsuperscript{3} Budge, \textit{Egyptian Magic}, p. 171.
perfumes”; he must then exorcise the demon and threaten to destroy him.

"... I, who am the servant of the Most High "... will excommunicate thee, will destroy thy " name and seal which I have in this box, will burn " them with unquenchable fire, and bury them in un- " ending oblivion ... ."

Consequently, when we find long repetitions of the names of ghosts and all the possible forms of death which may have overtaken them when alive on earth, or lists of demons with their peculiar characteristics, it is plain that the magician expects to vanquish the spirit as soon as he shows that he knows its name. It is immaterial that he himself should know exactly which one it is out of the long categories which he reels off; it is only necessary for him to make the list of possible demons sufficiently inclusive to contain the description or name of the particular demon which he wishes to exorcise, and it is enough that he should repeat its name in some form or other, that it should cease from troubling his patient. Indeed, this is the idea of what may be termed the poetical part of the Assyrian spells, which all begin with long descriptions of the particular demon which it is intended to drive out.

(3) RITUAL AND CEREMONIES.

There is still a third component to these texts, and this is the ritual and magic symbolism, especially in conjunction with certain stones, plants, hair, animals, etc., without which the ceremony, particularly in sympathetic magic, is incomplete. In the cases where Marduk is supposed to ask his father Ea for advice, the god returns with directions for purely magical ceremonies with loaves of bread, reeds, water, wax figures, and all kinds of objects which had magical powers if properly used. Many of these charms in early use in Mesopotamia are still employed among the modern Semitic descendants, and the methods of using them are just the same as they were three or four thousand years ago.

Animals and their hair were largely used in these ceremonies, and great stress was laid on their being undefiled. A young pig, a virgin kid, or its hair, are frequently mentioned, and this condition of ceremonial purity was imposed on the use of such beasts even as late as the Middle Ages, when the "virgin kid" was largely used by wizards in the making of parchment which was to be inscribed with magical spells.¹ In these incantations it becomes purely a question of sympathetic magic, and the animal, be it pig or kid, when killed, is placed near the body of the patient as a substitute for him in which the demoniacal influence may be absorbed. Thus it is advised in certain cases of sickness to take a "white kid of the god Tammuz," and, after taking out its heart and giving it to the sufferer to hold, the magician must lay the carcase down close to him and utter various chants over them. The baneful power will then pass from the man into the carcase, which must forthwith be cast forth from the house. This killing of the kid is elaborated in another recipe for the same disease, which tells how Ea gave advice to his son Marduk for the benefit of the sufferer:—

"The kid is the substitute for mankind, "He hath given the kid for his life,
"He hath given the head of the kid for the head of the man,
"He hath given the neck of the kid for the neck of the man,
"He hath given the breast of the kid for the breast of the man." ¹

That is to say, the body of the kid will receive the sickness which at present annoys the man. A tradition very similar to this is found in Morocco, and a man who has a headache will sometimes take a lamb or goat and beat it until it falls down, believing that the headache will thus be transferred to the animal.\(^1\)

Instead of the kid a sucking-pig might be taken, and after its heart had been removed its bristles were to be put on the head of the man, of course symbolical of his hair, its blood sprinkled on the sides of the bed, and the carcase opened and spread out on his limbs.

"Give the pig in his stead,
"And give the flesh as his flesh,
"The blood as his blood,
"And let him take it;
"Its heart (which thou hast set on his heart)
"Give as his heart,
"And let him take it."

Now the most remarkable parallel to this spell is contained in the New Testament story of the Gadarene swine. The devils which possess the two men beseech Jesus Christ, if He cast them out, to send them into the herd of swine which is feeding close at hand, and when the devils leave the men they at once take up their abode in the swine, which, according to the story, go mad and rush down the hill into the water, where they are drowned. Undoubtedly here is some reminiscence of the Assyrian or some similar tradition; in the cuneiform text we find the disease-devil leaving the possessed man at the sorcerer's invocation and entering the body of the pig. In the New Testament story, the swine are represented as alive when the demons enter them, but as soon as this happens they are immediately made to destroy themselves. If the body of the pig in the Assyrian incantation is to be thrown away or destroyed, as in the cases both of the kid and the vegetables, it is easy to see in this ending a distinct connection between the two. From the Assyrian incantation another and entirely different inference may be drawn, and this is that neither the Sumerians nor the Assyrians considered the pig an unclean animal. As a rule, no good Hebrew or Mohammedan would consent to touch a pig in this way, much less to have its blood sprinkled on his bed, or its heart laid upon him, although even among the Mohammedans swine's flesh is resorted to as a medicine in extremities. Zwemer¹ relates that Arab patients would come to him for a small piece of the flesh (which they suppose all Christians eat) to cure one in desperate straits.

A further development is the ceremony whereby the evil demons are transferred to a pot of water, which is then broken:—

"The evil Spirit (and) Ghost that appear in the desert,

"O Pestilence that has touched the man for harm,

"The Tongue that is banefully fastened on the man,
"May they be broken in pieces like a goblet,\(^1\)
"May they be poured forth like water."\(^2\)

The intention of the magician is that the demons, which have presumably been transferred to the water in the vessel with which he has been working the spell, will be dissipated when the pot is broken and the water poured forth on the ground. There would be no meaning in it otherwise.

To pass on to a different method which the Babylonian sorcerers used, it is curious to see an unusual development of the common wax-figure hocus-pocus. The system of making a magical wax figure of one's enemy in order to bring him into one's power was as common in Mesopotamia as elsewhere, and need not be discussed here, but there is an inverse process which Babylonian doctors used in order to rid their patients of malignant devils. This was by fashioning an image of the sufferer in some plastic material and by properly recited charms, to induce the demon to leave the human body and enter its waxen counterpart. For instance,\(^3\) one tablet directs that a piece of Sea-Clay should be taken and moulded into the likeness of the patient and placed on his loins at night in order that the Plague-god might be expelled. Further, at dawn, the "atonement for his body" was to be made, the "Incantation of Eridu" to be performed, and the man's face to be turned to the west. The symbolic use of Sea-Clay here is probably due to its connection with Ea, the god of the Ocean, who is so constantly invoked in charms and spells. There is a similar text\(^1\) wherein the magician makes a figure of the man in dough, and after bringing water to the man he pours out the water of the Incantation:

\(^1\) Cf. Ps. xxxi, 12, and Revelation ii, 27.
\(^3\) Tablet "R."

"Bring forth a censer and a torch;"
"As the water trickleth away from his body,"
"So may the pestilence in his body trickle away;"
"Return these waters into a cup and"
"Pour them forth in the broad places."

The demon will then depart from the man's body like the water, and will enter the figure.

An interesting parallel to this example of the use of a magical figure with a good object in view is afforded by a Legend of the Virgin Mary which is preserved in Ethiopic. It seems that a certain merchant was shot in the eye by a pirate at sea, and that his friends were unable to pull out the dart; in these straits he begged his friends to take him to the church of the Virgin, who was in the habit of working cures by means of wax figures. The people of the island on which her shrine stood used to make models of their wounded friends, with representations of the wounds on them, and take them to her, and when offerings had been made by those who brought them, both for the poor and for the church, the Virgin Mary caused the marks of the wounds to disappear from the wax figures, and as they went the men whom the figures represented were made whole. This being so, the friends of the merchant made a wax figure of him, with a dart sticking in one of its eyes, and when they had taken it to the church of the Virgin, and had made suitable gifts to the shrine, Mary had compassion upon the man and pulled the dart out of the eye of the wax figure, and as soon as she had done this the dart fell out of the merchant’s eye and he was healed at once.¹

The tying and loosing of magical knots, symbolic of spells bound or loosed from a person, was a form of magic as common in Assyria as it was and still is in other lands. By tying knots and at the same time chanting some magic words a wizard or witch could cast a tapu on an enemy, as is clear from the Maktu tablet, which ends one incantation against such malevolent beings with these words:—

"Her knot is loosed, her sorcery is brought to nought,
And all her charms fill the desert."²

In driving away a headache the following spell was used by the priest:—

"Take the hair of a virgin kid,
"Let a wise woman spin (it) on the right side
"And double it on the left,
"Bind twice seven knots
"And perform the Incantation of Eridu,
"And bind the head of the sick man,
"And bind the neck of the sick man,
"And bind his life,¹
"And bind up his limbs;
"And surround² his couch,
"And cast the water of the Incantation over him,
"That the Headache may ascend to heaven
"Like the smoke of a peaceful homestead,
"That like the lees of water poured out
"It may go down into the earth."³

A further use of the cord in headache cures is found in the same tablet.⁴ Unfortunately the beginning is lost, but at the end directions are given for spinning a threesfold cord and tying twice seven knots in it, and after performing the Incantation of Eridu this is to be tied on the head of the sick man. The headache will then go.

O'Donovan tells the story of a curiously similar method among the modern Persians for removing fever. A woman whose daughter was sick of a fever came to him with a handful of camel's hair that he might make it into a charm for her. He himself, being ignorant of the method by which this should be done, handed it over to a Khan who was with him. "By means of a spindle the camel hair was spun "to a stout thread, the Khan all the time droning "some verses from the Koran or some necromantic "chant. When the thread was finished it was of "considerable length, and folding it three times upon "itself he respun it. Then he proceeded to tie seven "knots upon the string. Before drawing each knot "hard he blew upon it. This, tied in the form of "a bracelet, was to be worn on the wrist of the "patient. Each day one of the knots was to be "untied and blown upon, and when the seventh knot "had been undone the whole of the thread was to be "made into a ball and thrown into the river, carrying, "as was supposed, the illness with it." ¹

(4) Tapu.²

In primitive communities certain social restrictions arise from the fear of the supernatural, that is to say,

² On this subject see M. Fossey's chapter in his La Magie Assyrienne (1902), p. 52.
a ban or tapu is laid on certain elements which from their nature are either holy or unclean. The totem of a tribe from its nature is tapu, and, if it be an animal, its flesh is prohibited as food to the members of that tribe; if a man has rendered himself unclean by his actions or condition he is set apart from the rest of his fellows lest he should communicate his dangerous state to the others, and so bring down the divine anger upon them as well. To the primitive man certain natural states or functions are dangerous from the fear of something supernatural, and all who are affected by them are temporarily placed under a ban.

In the Babylonian legends of the relations between gods and men, instances of anything which might be referred to the idea of tapu are not common. Possibly we may see this influence in one of the incidents related in the Gilgamish Epic.\(^1\) The goddess Ishtar, enraged at the refusal of her advances by the hero Gilgamish, creates a divine bull to destroy him, but he and his comrade Ea-bani slay it after a fierce encounter. At this Ishtar utters a curse against these two who have dared thus to challenge her power, and probably as a consequence Ea-bani dies and Gilgamish is smitten with a sore sickness. Here the goddess does not curse them until they have killed the divine bull, and the fundamental idea is therefore very much the same as that of many tapus concerning holy things. But there are many circumstances connected with this incident which it is impossible in our present state of knowledge to explain adequately, and it must therefore be understood that the suggested explanation is merely tentative.

\(^1\) See King, Babylonian Religion, p. 161.

In the magical texts, on the other hand, the principle of the ban and tapu underlies everything, both the affection of the sick man and the method of exorcising the devil which possesses him. For demons as well as mankind are subject to the divine tapu, and it is on this principle that the magic of the incantations depends, since the priest invokes the help of the gods to drive away the evil spirit, and to lay it under a ban and bind it. In the Assyrian exorcisms, when the prayers end with the line

"By Heaven be thou exorcised! By Earth be thou exorcised!"

it is intended that the powers of Heaven and Earth shall lay the demon under a tapu.

The divine tapu against spirits is described in one of the exorcisms in the following words:—

"Ban! Ban! *Tapu*¹ that none can pass,
"Tapu of the gods that none may break,
"Tapu of heaven and earth that none can change,

¹ The word used here is uṣurītu, which is derived from a root akin to the Hebrew יָשָׁר.
"Which no god may annul,
"Nor god nor man can loose,
"A snare without escape, set for evil,
"A net whence none can issue forth, spread for evil."

This principle of banning evil spirits is common to all systems of magic.

The influence of the tapu on human beings as a consequence of certain deeds or conditions was as prevalent among the Assyrians and Babylonians as among other primitive tribes. A great part of the series Shurpu is devoted to the removal of the mamit ("ban" or "tapu") which the man has wittingly or unwittingly incurred, and this mamit falls into classes, the one incurred by what at first sight appear to be breaches of ordinary social morality, such as murder, adultery, and theft; and the second by distinct ceremonial uncleanness, such as touching the bed or chair of a person under a tapu, or through the hostility of some enemy who has the power of bewitching him. There is no doubt that the tapu of uncleanness was as widely recognized among the Babylonians as among other nations; indeed, one incantation is entirely given up to the methods of purifying a certain person who has in some way become unclean either from

1 See Tablet "V," l. 1.
2 Shurpu, Tablet II, 47 ff.

4 In this case it is the mašmašu, or magician, who is to be cleansed.
touching dirty water or even merely casting his eye upon someone unclean:—

"While he walked in the street,
"...while he walked in the street,
"While he made his way through the broad places,
"While he walked along the streets and ways,
"He trod in some libation that had been poured forth, or
"He put his foot in some unclean water,
"Or cast his eye on the water of unwashen hands,
"Or came in contact with a woman of unclean hands,
"Or glanced at a maid with unwashen hands,
"Or his hand touched a bewitched woman,
"Or he came in contact with a man of unclean hands,
"Or saw one with unwashen hands,
"Or his hand touched one of unclean body."\(^1\)

Marduk then repeats this to Ea and asks how the man shall be purified, and in the ceremony which follows, sacred lavers play a large part. Here we undoubtedly have a most elementary form of ban; the man has become tapu because he has inadvertently come into contact with something or someone unclean. According to the explanatory text K. 156 (l. 68 ff.),\(^2\) a man might be contaminated by the lees of water which were thrown away undrunk, or by spittle

\(^1\) See Series LUH-KA, p. 137.
\(^2\) Haupt, Akkad. u. Sumer. Keilschr., No. 11
"which the dust covereth not"; at least, this is what is to be assumed from the exorcism which is to be recited in order to expel the evil resulting from some connection with them. Again, as was mentioned above, if a man ran up against another who was under a tapu, slept on his bed, sat on his chair, ate out of his plate, or drank from his cup, he was liable to the action of tapu, and it was necessary to remove such a ban with the help of the priest.\(^1\) Naturally, however, the particular tapu which had affected the man was not easily discovered, and it behoved the exorcist who drove away the divine curse which afflicted his patient to include in his chant long categories of possible eventualities, just as he did in expelling demoniac influences. The third tablet of the Shurpu series is entirely devoted to this, and gives a list of one hundred and sixty-three tapus. It begins in the following way:—

"Marduk, the priest of the gods, can loose

"The tapu of every sort which seizeth on

"The man, the son of his god."

And the lines which follow are all on one model—

"He looseth the ban of father or mother which hath seized on the man,

"He looseth the ban of a grandfather, the ban of a grandmother,

"He looseth the ban of brother or sister."

\(^1\) Zimmern, Shurpu, Tablet ii, 1. 99.
The tapus include those which come from the family, old or young, friend or neighbour, rich or poor; oven, bellows, pots and cups, bed or couch, chariot or weapons. To drink out of an unclean vessel, to sit in the sun, to root up plants in the desert, to cut reeds in a thicket, to slay the young of beasts, to pray with unclean hands, and a host of other common actions, might under certain conditions bring a tapu on the man.

Now it is plain that if dangerous results were not supposed to ensue on unclean acts there would be no point in banning them. Again, it is absurd to suppose that all this lengthy list of tapus in the Shurpu tablet was for the benefit of such as had omitted to wash their hands or vessels on all occasions, unless they gave some physical evidence that they were suffering from the effects of some supernatural hostility. Indeed, the 5th and 6th tablets of Shurpu begin with the words, "An evil curse hath fallen on the man like a devil," and the frequently recurring story of Marduk asking Ea for advice is repeated, Ea advising him as follows:—

"Go, O my son Marduk,
"Take him to a holy house of cleansing,
"Release his tapu, free his tapu!
"The perturbing evil in his body,
"Be it the curse of his father,
"Or the curse of his mother,
"Or the curse of his elder brother,
"Or the curse of some wicked woman
"Whom the man knoweth not."
It is therefore evident that, in early times at least, if a Babylonian fell sick he might be considered tapu, such an infliction arising out of his own agency or that of others. So that if a man were attacked by sickness it might be either ascribed to divine punishment for his acts against the gods, to the attacks of spirits, or to a closely allied theme, the curses or spells of some enemy, and for any of these cases he naturally became tapu until the spell or ban was lifted from him. This was effected through the aid of a priest, who was able by his knowledge of magical words, prayers, and ceremonies to invoke the gods to help him. By the help of what is known as "sympathetic magic" he was able to transfer the disease to something animate or inanimate, this being described in many cases as "making an atonement" for him, the word in Assyrian being kuppuru, exactly the equivalent of the Hebrew kipper of the Priestly Code, as was pointed out by Zimmern.¹

To return to the tapu among the Babylonians. We have seen that in this respect they are, as was to be expected, very similar to other nations, but in several things they show what may be an earlier conception of certain of the tapus, especially those concerning animals. For instance, the flesh of the pig was tapu only on certain days, and not at all times as among the later Hebrews and Mohammedans. In one of the "hemerology" texts these days are specified:—

"If a man eats swine's flesh on the thirtieth of Ab,\(^1\) boils will break out upon him.

"If a man eats the flesh of swine or oxen on the twenty-seventh of Tisri (such and such things will happen to him)."\(^2\)

Originally there seems to be no doubt that animals were sacred from their holy nature, and not from any "uncleanness."\(^3\) The dog, again, although the pariahs may have been held in a natural contempt, does not seem to have held any place among the "unclean" animals, judging from the personal names Kalbâ, Kalbi ("my dog"). It is, however, true that it is not uncommon for scribes in writing to the king to describe themselves as "dogs,"\(^4\) but this may be ascribed to their wish to call attention to their loyalty and fidelity, and not necessarily that they are base serfs. Fish, again, were tapu on the ninth of Iyyar,

\(^1\) July–August. It must be admitted that this is an obvious sanitary regulation. Compare also the views which the Egyptians held about the pig in chapter cxii of the Book of the Dead (ed. Budge, p. 176).

under pain of sickness; in Syria, where fish were sacred to Atargatis, if a man ate of them he was liable to be visited by a sickness of ulcers, swellings, or wasting disease.\(^1\) Even dates eaten on a forbidden day might produce ophthalmia. It must be admitted, however, that the element of hygiene probably enters largely into these restrictions, and that in many cases \(tapu\) has nothing to do with them at all.

Certain days were \(tapu\) for uttering a ban; "On the nineteenth of Iyyar he who utters a ban—a god will seize upon him."\(^2\) If a man hire a slave on the sixth of Siwan he will not be pleased with him, or if he marry on the twenty-fifth of Iyyar it will turn out unlucky. Sickness will befall the man who crosses a river on the twentieth of Ab.

We find among the Assyrians traces of the Royal \(Tapu\), that is to say, the abstention by the king from certain acts. These, however, are only \(tapu\) to him on the seventh, fourteenth, nineteenth, twenty-first, and twenty-eighth day of the month, that is to say, every seventh day and the forty-ninth (seven \times seven) day from the first of the preceding month. These acts are detailed in the "hemerology" tablets, and we may take a specimen.\(^3\)

"The seventh day [of the second Elul] is the "festival day of Marduk and Sarpanitum. A

"happy (?) day. An evil day. The shepherd of the wide-spreading peoples must not eat flesh that has been cooked over coals, nor bread (cooked) in ashes. He must not change the clothes of his body, nor put on white garments. He must not offer sacrifices. The King must not ride out in his chariot, and must not raise his voice in command. The priest must not utter decisions in a secret place. The physician must not lay his hand on the sick. It is unfit for making a curse. In the evening the King should make offerings and offer sacrifices to Marduk and Ishtar; his prayer will be pleasing unto the god."

One important point to notice in this hemerology, before going further into the matter of Royal tapus, is the distinction drawn between the king and some person who is called "the shepherd of the wide-spreading peoples." If this last is merely an equivalent for "king," as seems quite probable, it is not unlikely that we have here a text that is a recension based upon two different versions.

In these Royal and Priestly tapus are the relics of ancient days when priest-kings were accredited with a divine or supernatural nature. The prosperity of the king will result in a like happiness for the nation, and these seventh days or "sabbaths" being evil days, it was not fitting that the ruler of the people should render himself liable to any ban. When the Hebrews borrowed their Sabbath from Babylonia, they altered the conception of it and wove their own myths into the idea until it lost its original significance.

From the instances quoted above, it seems quite plain that tapu was a recognized idea among the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and doubtless as the texts are more and more examined the examples will be multiplied.

(5) The Atonement.

From the various passages from the cuneiform texts quoted above it will be seen that the Assyrians were in the habit of performing some ceremony akin to the "Atonement" of the Hebrews. The most striking coincidence, at first sight, is the parallel use of the words kuppuru and ṭ̄ēḇ, as has been already noted. In the distinctively priestly phraseology (Ezekiel and "P") the subject of ṭ̄ēḇ is the priest or sometimes the offering⁴; in the cuneiform texts, as far as it is at present known, the verb kuppuru is used in incantations only, also with the priest as subject.⁵ As these Sumerian incantations are undoubtedly older than the Priestly Code of the Hebrews in its present form, the most probable, if not the only possible, assumption is that the Hebrews took over the Babylonian idea during the Captivity, which thus left its mark on certain of their religious observances.

Now in the following cases of the Hebrew laws, for which an "atonement" is presented, it seems reasonably clear that the idea of tapu, just as in modern savage tribes, underlies the whole of them, and that this tapu will be removed by the priest's action:—

(1) A woman after childbirth (Lev. xii, 2 ff.).
(2) A person touching anything unclean (Lev. v, 2 ff.).
(3) A man or woman with an issue, or similar uncleanness (Lev. xv, 2 ff.).
(4) A Nazarite defiled by touching a dead body (Numb. vi).
(5) Leprosy, and the house wherein leprosy breaks out (Numb. xiv, 18, 53).

In the Assyrian exorcisms it is plain that the idea of the atonement is the same; the man has incurred some tapu, and the priest must remove it by some ceremony which is described by the word kuppuru. Consequently we may define the "atonement" as the means by which the supernatural danger which threatens the person lying under the tapu is removed from him, and thereby allows him to return to his place in society.

So much for the origin of the ceremony. With regard to the actual ceremonies themselves, there is no doubt that the principle of sympathetic magic is at the base of them. In the Assyrian cases this is at once obvious. For instance, in a certain disease of the head the priest is to lay a white kid of Tammuz alongside the sick man, take out its heart and put it in his hand, and the kid is therefore the material with which an "atonement" is to be made for the man, and it is afterwards to be thrown away. For a similar complaint a headdress (?) is to be made of a clean reed, and after the Incantation of Eridu the priest "makes the atonement" therewith, breaking it over the patient symbolically that it may be a substitute for him. In the case of a certain sickness an image of the patient is made of clay and placed on his loins at night, the "atonement" being made at dawn, or in another case a pot is to be filled with water and various vegetables, and after sprinkling the patient the "atonement" is to be made for him by the priest.

Two of the Hebrew cases give the distinct impression that the origin of the Hebrew "atonement" is to be sought in sympathetic magic. The first one is contained in the directions for cleansing the house in which leprosy appears, where the priest is to take two birds, cedar, scarlet, and hyssop, and after killing one of the birds in an earthen vessel over running water, he is to dip the remainder in the blood of the dead bird and in running water, and to sprinkle the house seven times; but he shall let go the living bird out of the city into the open fields. The second is the case of the scapegoat on whose head Aaron was to lay the sins of the children of Israel, and send him away by the hand of a "fit man" into the desert to bear their iniquities.\(^1\) Now there is no doubt as to the original signification of this, for the cases are entirely analogous to many of the sympathetic charms which have been already described.

3 Ibid., Tablet "R," p. 99.
4 Lev. xiv, 49.

There does not seem to have been any such ceremony as that of the living "Scapegoat" among the Assyrians. M. Fossey (La Magie Assyrienne, p. 85) satisfactorily refutes Mr. Prince's theory, which he put forward in the Journal of the American Oriental Society (1900, xxi, pp. 1–22), basing it on the Sumerian text published by Haupt (Akkad. u. Sumen. Keil­schrifttexte, p. 105). Since then, however, Mr. Prince has put forward another article (Journal Asiatique, July–August, 1903, p. 133) maintaining his previous proposition from the same text, which he translates as follows: — "Prends le bouquetin qui allège la douleur; place sa tête sur la tête du malade; du côté du roi, fils de son dieu (c'est-à-dire le patient), chasse-le; que sa salive dans sa bouche coule librement (soit lâchée); que le roi soit pur; qu'il soit sain." M. Fossey has answered it in footnotes to the same paper, and, as he properly points out, "chasse-le" is not the right translation for U-ME-TE-GUR-GUR, which should be rendered by the Assyrian equivalent koppir, "make the atonement for." Consequently there is nothing to show that the goat was alive, and from a comparison of similar texts in which the animal has obviously been sacrificed (see pp. 17, 29, etc.) it is plain that M. Fossey is correct when he says that the goat was killed (La Magie Assyrienne, p. 86).

\(^2\) Lev. xvi, 21.

We may briefly recapitulate, therefore, the important points which the Assyrian magical texts seem to indicate. First, the threefold method of the magician which demanded the "Word of Power" by the invocation of some divine power, the ostentatious knowledge concerning the hostile demon, and the correct use of spells and prescriptions. Secondly, that underneath all the paraphernalia of ritual and ceremonies lies the root-idea of the tapu, which will probably be found to be of still greater importance as new material is published. Lastly, the existence of an "atonement" ceremony in Assyria which so curiously parallels certain parts of the Levitical Law, even down to the use of the same word to express this idea. In this last case, as in many others, everything at present points to the Jewish ceremony, as we should expect, having been borrowed from Babylonia. With every new publication of magical texts it becomes plainer how the natives of Chaldea left behind them a reputation for all forms of magic and sorcery, and how greatly they influenced the beliefs of their successors.

Akal tumri. Jensen suggests the meaning “Salz” for tumri as a synonym of ṭōbu and idranu (Mythen und Epen, p. 447). However, a wider comparison of the texts in which it occurs will probably suggest a different meaning:

tarami-mu asm rešu tabula, ša kainamma tumri špukakki: “Thou didst love the shepherd Tabula (?), who perpetually heaped up tumri for thee.” (Gilgamish, Tablet VI, 58–59.)

   . . . imma nigittu ibteli šatu, . . . . imtakkutu itur ana tumri:
(Plate VI.)

"Twice seven loaves cooked in the ashes* against the shut door place and

10. "Give the pig in his stead and

"Let the flesh be as his flesh,

"And the blood as his blood,

"And let him hold it;

15. "Let the heart be as his heart

"(Which thou hast placed upon his heart)

"And let him hold it;

20. . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . .

. . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . .

"The light [died away?], the fire went out, the . . . . [which] had fallen turned to tumri." (Gilgamish, S. 1,040, ll. 19–20; Jensen, Mythen, p. 164.)

ina napṭar malati-ki išatu iddi-ma kina tumri išpuk: "On all thy lands he hath cast fire and like tumri hath heaped up." (W.A.I., iv, 19, No. 3, 40.)

širu ša ina penti bašlu akal tumri ul ikkal: "Flesh which hath been cooked on the coals, bread of tumri shall he not eat." (W.A.I., iv, 32, ii, 15)

kuman tumri (Craig, Religious Texts, 15, 20, K. 2,001): "a cake of tumri."

Akal tumri sibit adi śina bab kamē itassuk·ma: "Twice seven loaves of tumri place against the closed door." (This passage.)

A vocabulary gives a group tu-um-[ru], ki-nu-nu ("oven"), and ku-tu-ru (connected with kutru, "smoke"), (K. 13,690). From these it seems fairly clear that tumru means "ashes," the "bread of ashes" being the ordinary flat cake such as is cooked in the ashes by the Arabs of the present day.

b Among certain savage tribes it is often the custom to spin a thread by rolling the strands sharply along the right thigh with the hand, and it seems that some such process is suggested here. (See Tylor, Anthropology, p. 246.)

c Fossey, La Magie Assyrienne (Paris, 1902), p. 466, suggests "peut-être . . . un euphémisme pour désigner le membre viril." On the other hand, "to bind the soul" would be quite intelligible in modern savage witchcraft. (See Fraser, Golden Bough, vol. i, p. 247.)

* Pikurtu, according to Jensen (ZK., i, 321; cf. ii, 25), means bluthensi, but this seems doubtful. He draws his conclusions principally from the Sixth Tablet of the Series Shurpu (W.A.I., iv, 7),

"As this pikurtu is shredded and is cast into the fire,
"And the Fire-god devoureth it;
"Its art will not return to its palm-tree,
"Nor will it be used in the process of dyeing."

As Jensen says, pikurtu is to be referred to the Aram. root ḫ'kar,
"Take . . . . . . . and "Take cedar . . . . . . and
230. "Plait a triple cord" . . . and "Tie twice seven knots and 235. "Perform the Incantation of Eridu and "Bind the head of the sick man,
"That the evil Spirit, the evil Demon may stand aside,
"And a kindly Spirit, a kindly Genius be present."

240. Tablet IX of the Series "Headache"
COMPLETE.

[Colophon.]

"to bind." In the Fifth Tablet of the Series Maqiù (l. 54), a pikurtu ša ḫadišāti is mentioned. In the present text the magician is directed to "take cedar . . . . . ., and weave a triple pikurtu, tying twice seven knots in it." Now, taking into consideration that the Aram. p'kar means "to bind," it seems most probable that pikurtu is a cord of fibre. The Shurpu text must then be translated, "As this cord is unravelled . . . . ., its fibres will not return to its palm-tree," and in the Maqiù tablet it is certainly plausible that the pikurti of the sacred temple-women are the cords mentioned in Baruch vi, 43. The palm fibre is a material still used in the making of ropes in Assyria.

b The meaning of this line is obscure, firstly because we do not know what is meant by the expression “the bow of the viper,” and secondly isakkir is doubtful. The sense may be that nothing can be produced by reason of the disease, and if so isakkir is to be compared in sense to the Hebrew בְּנֵי in 1 Sam. i, 5, “the Lord had shut up her womb.”

a The variant gives alallī ʾissı kippatum. Kippatu occurs in the phrase kippat ʾuḫari (W.A.I., v, 26, 59), "the kippatu of a bird-trap," and therefore kippatu cannot be the name for a certain kind of wood or tree. It is probably the same word as the Hebrew kippâd, a branch or twig, and if so, the kippat ʾuḫari will be the small piece of wood which props up the door or lid of the trap. In the case of alallī kippat or alallī ʾissı kippatum, "an alallu of twigs," alallu is to be referred to the root alâlu, "to bind," i.e., a bundle. See also Tablet "A A," l. 63.

b The same phrase occurs in Tablet "D," l. 29. The translation is, however, doubtful.

* Tappinu, written ideographically कु - शेः, and therefore evidently connected with corn. It occurs in another incantation (K. 5,266 and Bu. 89-4-26, 16) in the line sibit akal tappinni eilli liki-[ma], "Take seven loaves of pure tappinu." Now since it can be moulded into figures, as in the text above, it is a plastic material, and, as we have shown, it is connected with corn, and loaves are made of it; consequently dough is the obvious meaning. Although a common material among savage tribes for making magical figures, it has not been otherwise met with in the Assyrian texts. On the use of seven loaves of bread in Semitic magic, see Introduction.

* Kakkultu, the equivalent of the same ideogram as namsitu, a metal vessel quoted in lists of spoil and in contract-tablets. The Syriac kakhiltu means "a cake" (Brockelmann, Lexicon, p. 157a), and if the two words are to be connected kakkultu will probably mean a flattish vessel of some kind. Here it is evidently meant to be turned upside down to enclose the evil influence.

On earth they are not understood,
They know not how to stand,
They know not how to sit,

10. No food they eat,
No water they drink.

The Reverse states that the tablet was a votive offering to Nabu, and it was doubtless intended to be placed in the Library in the Temple of that god in Nineveh.

Col. II (Plate XLII).

The head (has) a fillet and a horn . . .
She wears a head-ornament, she wears a fly (?). She wears a veil; the fist of a man;
5. She is girt about the loins;
Her breast is open,
In her left arm she holds a babe sucking her breast.
Inclining towards her right arm;
From her head to her loins
10. The body is that of a naked woman;

Hebrew liwyāh, "crown" or "wreath" (Prov. i, 9; iv, 9). As is sometimes to be seen in the terra-cotta figures of the goddess, who is represented holding a babe in her left arm, a long veil covers the back part of the headdress and falls down the back.
a Sippuru from this line and l. 9 ("from her head to her sippuri") evidently means "loins" or something similar, as Bezold has pointed out.

a Kan ṭappi, from the expression in this line "from the loins to her kan ṭappi," evidently signifies some part of the feet, and hence ṭappi must undoubtedly be referred to the Hebrew ṭephāḥ, "the palm of the hand," i.e., the sole of the foot. Kannu is the same as the Hebrew kēn, the Syriac kanna (Brockelmann, p. 160, b), "basis."

b Kuliptu from its connection is probably the same as the Syriac kŭlapbṭa, squama (Brockelmann, p. 324, a), in spite of the change from k to ḳ.

c Papan libbi is uncertain, but "navel" seems a probable translation. Bezold, "das Pochen (?) ihres Herzens bewegt (?) die Meeresflut" (Z.A. ix, 116).
From the loins to the sole of the foot \(^a\)

His mouth is beslavered with water;
The ears are like those of a basilisk,
His horns are twisted into three curls,

The sole of his foot has no heel \(^h\);
His name is Sassu-urinu (?),

25. A sea-monster, a form of Ea.

\(^a\) Nin-tu and Maḫ are both forms of the goddess Belit-ili.

\(^b\) Ussuru probably to be referred to the Syriac ṣir, involutus (Brockelmann, p. 247, b). Ḫinnu is doubtful.

\(^c\) Lišu, see note to l. 4.

texts (Boissier, Documents Relatifs, p. 173, l. 29).
